Geography is the study of the interrelationships between the earth and its people. As both a social and natural science, geography focuses on climate, land, water, space, mineral resources, population, changes in the environment and how people adapt to them. Numerous tools and techniques are employed in geographic research including cartography (the art and science of map making and use), geographic information systems (GIS), satellite imagery and air photo interpretation, surveys, mathematical modeling and statistical analysis.

Graduates can find employment in business, government agencies, research, management, non-profits and education fields. Employers recommend one or more internships to be successful and competitive when entering this field.
