Four Science Alumni Credit Success to KU Programs

By Travis Snavelly '02

William "Chet" Schreiber '72 has developed a new hobby he hopes will evolve into a second career he can settle into after he retires from his self-made company, Smart Sonic.

"I have an appreciation for fine wine and I thought it would be a challenge to make it myself," said Schreiber, whose day job as founder and president of Smart Sonic Corporation, is developing environmentally safe cleaning products for circuit board stencils.

Schreiber plans to grow Zinfandel and Barbara vines on six of his 42 acres of hilltop property in Westlake Village, Calif. His ultimate goal is to combine a winemaking business with a brewery-type restaurant that incorporates wine tasting as part of the attraction.

Schreiber's interest in wine began with the Italian Swiss Colony and Boone's Farm wines he drank in his younger days. Now, with a more developed taste and an expanded budget, his personal favorites are red zinfandels.

In the past few years, Schreiber has spent a great amount of time building his knowledge of the art of winemaking. In addition to reading about winemaking and taking distance courses on viniculture and enology at the University of California Davis, Schreiber and his wife, Carol, recently visited France and toured many vineyards in Alsace and Champagne.

In fact, the Schreibers spent their honeymoon in Italy, including two weeks in Tuscany, an area rich in vineyards and wine production.

Recently, the Alumni Association of Southern California University asked Schreiber to head a seminar on wine tasting and enology.

"It was very successful," Schreiber said. During the one-and-a-half hour bus ride to the Santa Barbara wine country, Schreiber gave his presentation on different grape varieties, what to look for in a bottle of wine, and "how to select a bottle of wine and get the best value for your dollar."

"Unfortunately, for the uninformed, fine wine comes at a high price," said Schreiber. "My quest for better wine forced me to search for quality and value. Today, I normally spend less than $10 per bottle for a fine Cabernet Sauvignon, Chardonnay or Zinfandel."

This example of Schreiber's business sense demonstrates the driving force that guided him from restaurant manager after college (where he majored in biology) to the creation of his own company in 1983. Through the company, Schreiber has developed the only cleaning process for circuit board stencils to pass the Environmental Protection Agency's rigid certification standards.

Before Schreiber introduced Smart Sonic's process, stencil cleaning procedures involved the use of hazardous chemicals, many made of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons, to remove solder remnants from the circuit board stencils. Smart Sonic's cleaning process is a water-based cleaning system that replaces the harmful CFCs.

Schreiber's business has won numerous awards from environmental and business organizations and Smart Sonic's extensive list of high-power clients includes Intel, Motorola, and Hewlett Packard, among others.

While still heading Smart Sonic, Schreiber continues to study winemaking and is confident he can make a wine business work. "Despite the cliché that the fastest way to end up with a million dollars in the wine business is to start with $2 million, I think I can make some really good wine at less than $10 per bottle," Schreiber said. "Or at least have fun trying."

A Gem in the Rough

Look at a jewelry store's display rack and you'll see a showcase of gemstones with perfect symmetry, cut, and reflection. Gemstones don't start out this beautiful, however, and this is exactly what KU alumnus John Rhoads '75 loves about his chosen art of gem cutting.

"Gemstones appeal to me for the beauty, but I also love that I can take a rough piece that isn't that attractive and turn it into something beautiful," Rhoads said. "There's always that moment of discovery when you first look at it. I've had my breath taken away by some stones when I'm finished."

John and his wife Donna founded D&J Rare Gems, Ltd. in 1985 and watched it grow from a strictly mail-order company for rare gems to a more expansive business that included lapidarian gem cutting services for both fine and rare gems and a retail store in Salida, Colorado, where the Rhoads live. In 1999, the Rhoads closed their retail store and now sell their gemstones in national gem trading shows across the country, as well as through a website, through which the Rhoads send monthly newsletters to customers in 12 foreign countries and within the United States.

The details of Rhoads' work are precise. Using a process called flat lapping, Rhoads presses the rough gemstone against a rotating metal lap belt impregnated with various grades of diamond grit. He initially uses a rougher grit lap, then progressively switches to finer grits until he has attained the desired smoothness, shape, and facets of the stone.

The process also calls for a great deal of time studying the rough gem to find the most workable cut. Rhoads said sometimes he will study a rough gem for two weeks or more, although a gem cutter can never truly tell the outcome of a gemstone until it is finished. "There are all sorts of minor factors that can affect how the stone turns out."

With each stone taking three to four hours of work, Rhoads cuts an average of two stones a day and stays extremely focused on his craft. "I usually skip lunch," Rhoads said. "You get so occupied that lunchtime just breezes by and you don't even think about it."

John traced his growing interest in minerals to the age of 3. He grew up in Reading where he studied the calcite crystals from the abundance of area quarries, including one right next to his backyard. Throughout his youth, minerals and crystals continued to captivate him and at KU he followed this interest by majoring in geology. Rhoads cited then-KU geology professor John Scott as a strong and knowledgeable influence on his learning of the mineralogy field.

Rhoads has had many interesting experiences in his search for gemstones. On a trail just off the slopes of Pike's Peak, a trail thousands of people have traveled before, Rhoads discovered a buried chunk of gem-grade smoky quartz with measurements of "a good-size cooler." And in June, while collecting gem-grade peridot at a high elevation, Rhoads saw one of the Colorado fires spread from 300 acres at the start of the day to 30,000 acres by day's end.

In order to be closer to many gems' origins, John and Donna lived in Malawi, Africa from 1986 to 1988 teaching trigonometry and algebra. Malawi is near Zambia and Tanzania, countries rich in gem mining.

"After we were there for six months, we started seeing some gem rough," said Rhoads, who said he had to do some major bartering with the locals to get excellent deals on valuable gemstones. "In Africa, we encountered some of the best gems we ever saw, but we didn't have the money to pay fair price for them. One of the first deals I made was with a miner who brought a gemstone to me and wanted $1,500, but we negotiated it down to $15."

Although a gem cutter, Rhoads said he does not have an extensive collection of his own gems. Many of the gemstones he does keep have intrinsic value to the Rhoads, as John cut some of the finer pieces in his collection and gave them to Donna as gifts.

Childhood Dreams Do Come True

As one of his many jobs as senior animal care specialist in the Animal Care Department of Sea World Orlando, Jeff Dolan '87 has spent the past four years taking care of injured or abandoned manatees rescued from the wild. His department rehabilitates the manatees, readying them for release back into their natural environment.

Jeff Dolan with Garfield, a 22-year old, 3,000-pound walrus.

Dolan said most manatees his department treats have been hit by boats at least once. The Animal Care Department assists the state by tracking and treating injured manatees. Each manatee's condition is evaluated and the department decides whether to release it on site or to take it back to the park for further rehabilitation.

"The rehabilitation usually involves tube feeding and giving injections," Dolan said. "It can be a real challenge trying to give a shot to a 1,500 pound manatee that doesn't want to get a shot."

Dolan said his most rewarding experience is rehabilitating baby manatees. "These little guys come in weighing 45-60 pounds. Most have a belly full of dirt because they are hungry and they have been eating the dirt off the bottom of the river."

Around-the-clock rehabilitation for the calves starts with tube feedings every three to four hours. After a month or two, Dolan teaches the calves how to take bottle feedings, which will last until they are about one-and-a-half to two years old. Dolan and staff sometimes keep track of the manatees after they have been released back into the wild.

"One manatee, Georgia, who we rescued back in the early '90s, was seen with her own calf a few years later," Dolan said. "Then, a few years ago, Georgia's calf was seen with her own baby."

Dolan's Animal Care Department is also responsible for running many exhibits at Sea World which include animals such as sea lions, seals, dolphins, manatees, and a "Wild Arctic" exhibit with polar bears, walrus and beluga whales.

Dolan's interest in marine life began as a child with regular family excursions from home in Pittsburgh to Sea World in Ohio. From these experiences, Dolan took with him a love for marine life.

"The oceans have always fascinated me," Dolan said. "It's amazing that the oceans have depths that dwarf our tallest mountains. We also know very little about what is really in all that water. It is truly the last frontier."

After graduating from KU with a B.A. in marine science, Dolan lived in Ocean City, Md., working at an amusement park and a department store. After a year-and-a-half, however, Dolan decided it was time he started pursuing his lifelong dream.

"I quit my job, packed up my car and moved to Florida," Dolan said. "I knew no one, had no job, no place to stay. All I knew was I was going to work for Sea World with the dolphins." After seven months of working in the operations department of Sea World, Dolan applied for and received a position in the Animal Care Department.

"The rest is history," Dolan said.

Dolan currently lives in Orlando with his wife of nine years, Patricia, also a Sea World staff member, and a 100-pound labrador/doberman mix.

"I had a dream that I was going to grow up and work with dolphins," Dolan said. "I did it. Anyone can realize their dreams as long as they are willing to work hard to achieve them."

Getting Right to Work

A lot can happen in a year, as Michele Lee-Blakeney '01 has discovered. Lee-Blakeney began her career at Sea World San Antonio's Educational Department the Tuesday following her May 2001 graduation. And she has recently been promoted to the Animal Training Division of the marine-based tourist park.

As part of her official duties as animal trainer, Lee-Blakeney works with the park's three killer whales, including the icon of Sea World - Shamu.

"We interact with the whales in a variety of ways," Lee-Blakeney said. "These interactions help stimulate the environment and the life of the whale."

Lee-Blakeney is responsible for preparing and maintaining the habitat of the whales, as well as observing and keeping data on their behavior. She also aids other trainers in different types of whale behavioral training sessions. And, as with all the trainers at

Sea World, Lee-Blakeney has grown attached to her animal charges and is continually impressed by their abilities.

"After working with these magnificent animals, it amazes me that they can learn and remember more than 200 behaviors," Lee-Blakeney said. "The whales can recognize and distinguish different hand signals that represent those 200-plus behaviors."

Lee-Blakeney said her education at KU has helped her with the many tasks she is responsible for at Sea World. Her psychology degree is integral in the behavioral modification and operant conditioning training of the whales. In addition, her speech courses have given her excellent practice for talking in front of thousands of Sea World guests. She also said playing on the KU golf team and being president of two clubs, the Marine Science Club and S.O.A.R. (Students Organizing Against Rape), taught her to work well in team situations as well as how to manage her time.

"This is what I have always wanted to do," Lee-Blakeney said. "It is hard to believe that I get paid to live my dream."

Dr. Wendy Ryan, professor of biological sciences at KU, said there is considerable interest and competition for jobs at Sea World, though she remembers Lee-Blakeney as a person with the skills and drive to attain her dream job.

"She is very motivated and incredibly determined," said Ryan. "She has a dynamic personality, which is important because the position involves relating to and communicating with the public."

KU's expert faculty and diverse course selection in the marine science field prepare students for jobs such as Lee-Blakeney's by providing hands-on experience with specialized equipment and by working directly with animals. To complete this preparation, the program requires students to take three courses at the Marine Science Consortium in Wallops Island, Va.

When Lee-Blakeney worked in Sea World's Educational Department as a resident camp counselor, she was responsible for teaching people of all ages about the different jobs at Sea World, including animal care, aviculture and animal training.

In addition to the exciting advances in her career, Lee-Blakeney also became the bride of college beau and fellow KU graduate Chad Blakeney '02 on June 8. The Blakeney's recently became official Texas residents and are currently building a house in San Antonio. ■

Hometown Girl Leads Fifth Largest School District in State

By Pamela Rohland '81

Talk to Reading School District Superintendent Dr. M. Melissa Jamula '74&'78 for five minutes and the word "nonstop" will pop into your head.

Nonstop energy and nonstop caring, that is. This educator displays an unwavering positivity and genuine concern for people from all walks of life, personal characteristics that have made her one of the district's most popular figures with students, faculty, and staff for more than 28 years.

Even more remarkable is the way this former elementary school teacher has won over the Reading School Board.

Two years ago, when the career of Jamula's predecessor crashed on the jagged shoals of personality conflicts, leaving the fifth largest school district in the state in turmoil, School Board members turned to one of their favorite former administrators for help. By that time, Jamula had worked her way through a variety of teaching and administrative positions in the district - her last one being assistant to the superintendent. In 1998, she started an educational consulting business, New Century Solutions, Inc., in partnership with Tim Daley, a former Reading police sergeant. Here, Jamula advised districts around the country on how to create safer schools.

"You would be surprised by the power of prevention," she says. "People create a safe atmosphere, not metal detectors and security guards. People who believe that all else pales next to the need for safe schools are the ones who make it work."

It is exactly that sincere I-believe-in-people frame of mind, along with her extensive experience working in the district, that prompted the board to contract with Jamula and New Century to provide the services of acting superintendent. Jamula's contract was intended to last only 200 days, but anyone watching this scenario unfold could have predicted that she was going to stay and be named to the top spot, in part because of her strong emotional attachment to the district.

"I bleed red and black," Jamula confesses, referring to the district's colors. Mary Melissa Palm, named after her grandmothers, was born to be a hometown girl.

Her late father, Douglas Palm, was captain of the Reading police detectives unit, a Reading School Board member and a Reading City Council member. Her mother, Irma Palm, who still lives in the city, worked as an executive secretary at the YWCA.

A 1970 graduate of Reading High, Jamula developed a commitment to community and urban education at a young age. Tutoring inner-city kids for two years while she was in college made an impact that never left her.

"You're being given an opportunity to help the kids who need it most," she says.

In 1974, she married, graduated from KU with a bachelor's degree in elementary education, and accepted a job teaching in the city's elementary schools. She received her master's degree as a reading specialist from KU in 1978, and she became a "floater," a flexible position that led her to teach in every school in the district, including the middle schools and high school. Jamula acknowledges that it was an excellent opportunity to experience the scope of urban public education at the ground level.

After the birth of her son, Brad, in 1977, Jamula returned to teaching for a while, then served as coordinator of Reading Area Community College's adult basic education program. At the college, she coordinated programs for people who could not read, could not speak English, or who had dropped out of high school.

In 1986, then-superintendent James Henderson asked Jamula to become his assistant for personnel, no small task in a district with 3,500 students and 1,655 employees. Before leaving the district to start her business in 1998, Jamula earned a doctoral degree in educational administration from Temple University and served as assistant for instructional services, overseeing the areas of curriculum and instruction, staff development, grants administration, federal programs, special education, alternative education, bilingual education, pupil services, athletics, and extracurricular activities.

Jamula thinks nothing about this daunting array of tasks except that it helped give her a picture of the entire range of the educational process.

A Conversation with Dr. F. Javier Cevallos

There are those who consider themselves a "take charge" kind of leader. And they sometimes pause in their leading long enough to look over their shoulder to notice that the followers have gotten lost. I like to think of myself as a "take responsibility" kind of leader.

I have a very inclusive style of management. When there are difficult decisions to be made within the university, I take advantage of the expertise and experience of various groups and individuals around me. I urge participation by representatives of those groups that will be affected by the decision. I seek guidance and advice from our Council of Trustees and from community leaders in the areas we serve. But, ultimately I make the decision, and ultimately does not take forever. If it does, the whole notion of leadership evaporates.

Universities can be slow to react. They are big institutions and there is not always a unanimous perception of the challenges and opportunities ahead, let alone the most effective course of action to deal with them. But, you cannot allow events to overtake you, to take control of your destiny, to make your decisions for you. I gather as much information as I can, and involve as many stakeholders as I can, and I try to focus those resources toward an appropriate decision deadline. And once the decision has been made, I take responsibility for it.

As I write this I have been here two months. Yet, already I have seen the wealth of involved, dedicated and gifted advisors, both on and off campus, who make their time available to me.

Kutztown University is blessed with a very active, supportive Council of Trustees. I was honored by the presence of several of our trustees at our annual opening day breakfast for all staff and faculty. During that breakfast we announced Secondary Education Chairwoman and KU alumna Kathleen Dolgos '68 as the 2002 recipient of the Kutztown University of Pennsylvania Arthur and Isabel Wiesenerger Award for Excellence in Teaching.

It has also been my pleasant discovery that the attitude of involvement and support does not exist only among the trustees. It extends throughout the faculty, staff, and student body.

I can think of no better example of this than the extensive, campuswide participation in the planning and production of the three days of events at KU surrounding our commemoration of September 11, 2001. Nor can I think of any other university I know or have been associated with that would have, could have, so easily gathered such a comprehensive group with such impressive, moving results. Perhaps it was not so easy as it appeared to me, but the campus leadership made it seem so.

I invite you to visit your alma mater's website, www.kutztown.edu, to see photos taken during the numerous and varied events. And you will want to check back from time to time to see further evidence of the constant efforts toward improvement that go on here.

As alumni you have entrusted me with a sacred obligation. Your diploma represents one of the largest investments you will ever make, and unlike other investments, you cannot sell this one if it appears its value will drop. I, and those I am surrounded by, are obliged to be caretakers of the value of that diploma. Much of the value derives from the excellent work you do in your professional careers, and the reputation for excellence your efforts create. But much of that reputation also stems from the role the university plays in our region, state and nation. It also derives from the quality of graduates we produce to follow in your footsteps.

Please know that in my short time here I have become well aware of how valuable a Kutztown University diploma is, and I am determined, and find myself ably assisted, to uphold and increase the prestige associated with proclaiming, "I am a Kutztown University graduate." ■

"During the last five years I was in the school district, the city experienced a change," she says. "There were gangs and more violence. We were convinced that it wasn't going to invade our schools, so we began working on prevention methods with the Youth Aid Division of the Reading police."

Together, the district and police began training faculty and staff about gang identification symbols and enforcement of prevention methods.

"Our staff would tell kids to take off the beads or shoelaces that identified them as gang members," Jamula says. "When gang members wrote notes to each other in class, teachers made copies and sent them to police."

"After a while, we could stand outside the high school in the morning and watch gang members take off their bandanas before they came into school. We learned that we had to respect the gang as an established organization, then they would respect the school."

"We knew we couldn't change the world, but we felt that if we could prevent violence in the school between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m., then we had won."

This experience planted the seed for New Century Solutions. Jamula and her partner used their own capital to start the business, which, for the first couple of years, was run from Daley's dining room.

"We were ahead of the curve; this was pre-Columbine," she says. "We didn't do much market analysis before we started, but there was little risk because there was little overhead."

Now located in a building in Mount Penn, New Century Solutions utilizes a cadre of 15 contracted consultants, mostly retired administrators and police officers. Direct mailings to school administrators, networking with professional contacts, and publicity generated by testifying before Congress and the Pennsylvania Senate about school violence attracted clients. Still, Jamula admits to experiencing entrepreneurial jitters.

"I found out how very little I knew about business," she says, laughing.

When the Reading School District approached Jamula about returning as acting superintendent, she agreed, she says, because she loves the district and felt the people there needed her to provide consistency during a transitional period. In June 2001, still in need of her stabilizing presence and diplomatic, inclusive leadership style, the board then offered her the superintendent position and a four-year contract. "It's a very happy marriage," Jamula says of her relationship with the school board.

Her greatest pleasure in the superintendent's job comes from dealing with students. Unlike many superintendents, Jamula is not cocooned inside an administration building all day. She opens the door to her office and steps into Reading High School's main foyer. Jamula lauds the cultural and economic diversity of the district, which she believes ultimately will benefit the community as students educated in this environment graduate and take their tolerance of differences with them into the workplace.

"Kids here have friends of all backgrounds," she says. "This district is a microcosm of the world. We truly believe that our diversity is our strength."

"The fact that all kids in the district attend the same high school is a unifying factor. No matter where you come from in the city, you eventually become a Red Knight."

Today, Jamula has several new goals. Before her contract expires in 2005 - and she insists, declares, and vows that she won't renew - she wants to compile information from documents, such as long-range and strategic plans, so her successor has a clear sense of the district's history and planned direction. She also hopes to make the district more academically competitive with others around the country.

"Many of our students haven't had the economic or cultural experiences we've been blessed to have," she says. "We want to open doors for them, create a love of literature, teach them to be critical thinkers."

"Our kids so appreciate that. They know if you really care about them." ■

Freyberger Creates State System's First Endowed Chair

Dr. Ruth Freyberger '35 established a $1 million irrevocable trust to fund the first endowed chair at Kutztown University. The chair, allocated for Pennsylvania German heritage studies, will be the first of its kind in the State System of Higher Education.

Freyberger, who learned about her own Pennsylvania German heritage at her grandmother's knee, said just a few months before her death on Sept. 14, that the gift was to honor former KU president David E. McFarland's commitment to the Pennsylvania German Heritage Center.

Freyberger was perhaps best known to the community for her 1991 donation of a 150-year-old one-room school, which was moved three miles from Greenwich Township to the site of KU's Heritage Center. The donation of the schoolhouse and the endowment gift is symbolic of Freyberger's fervent interest in preserving the culture, traditions, and heritage of the Pennsylvania Germans.

Freyberger was a retired professor of art education from the College of Visual Arts at Illinois State University. She spent 15 years as an art teacher in the public schools of Pennsylvania and 32 years at Illinois State where she taught art, elementary and special education majors until her retirement in 1983.

She was an acclaimed watercolor artist and in 1993 was named Distinguished Fellow in the National Art Education Association and a Distinguished Member of the Illinois Art Education Association. In 1994, she received an Outstanding Alumni Award from the Alumni Association of Reading High School and an Alumni Citation Award from KU in 1979.

Dr. David Valuska, director of the Pennsylvania German Heritage Center, has been appointed to the endowed chair. ■

Alumni Gift Helps Meet Kresge Challenge and Retirement Needs

Charles Stopp '70 and his wife, Barbara, recently made a significant gift to the Kutztown University Foundation that will have a substantial impact on the Kresge Foundation Challenge as well as provide part of their retirement income. The prestigious Kresge Foundation issued a $500,000 challenge grant to KU this summer as an incentive to fulfill the goals of the Third Century Capital Campaign.

The Stopps were committed to Charlie's alma mater and wanted to make a significant gift to the Third Century Fund. An attorney with offices in Slatington and Schnecksville, Charlie said, "I am very grateful to Kutztown University for the many educational, social and developmental opportunities provided when I was a student."

Understandably, their retirement needs were a concern. Working with the Foundation staff, the Stopps decided a gift of appreciated property would enable them to make a more significant gift than if they gave cash.

A parcel of land was given to the Foundation and subsequently sold. The proceeds from the sale of the land, nearly $33,000, were used to create a deferred gift annuity that will pay the Stopps a lifetime income starting in 2014, after they both retire.

Besides benefiting from the opportunity to share in the substance and success of the university, the Stopps enjoyed some more tangible benefits as well: they were able to avoid capital gains tax, and they may claim a charitable gift deduction on their income tax for the full sale price of the land. Factoring in their tax savings, their annuity pays them the equivalent of a 16.9 percent return.

Charlie has also been very generous with his time. He has been an active member of the Kutztown University Foundation Board of Directors, having just retired from the Board after serving for more than 12 years. He has been a volunteer for the Business and Industry Division of the Annual Fund for several years, and for both the Third Century Fund and the 125th Anniversary Challenge Fund capital campaigns.

Through his firm, Steckel and Stopp, Charlie has been a sponsor of the popular Decision Makers Forum and the Community Scholars Program.

In recognition of the Stopps' gift, a laboratory in the new science building will be named in their honor.

If you would like to make a gift to KU and provide a lifetime income for yourself, contact Dick Button at 610-683-1394 or button@kutztown.edu.

Many Recognized at Hall of Fame and Athletic Awards Banquet

May 31, 2002 marked a spectacular ending to a superb year for Kutztown University Athletics. Five new members were inducted into the Athletic Hall of Fame, and more than 40 alumnae were on hand to take part in the Hall of Fame's special recognition and revival of Tau Kappa. In addition, the athletic department named its athletes and coaches of the year.

Athletic Awards

Tau Kappa Recognition, Revival

Tau Kappa, an honorary sorority composed of the most outstanding female athletes at Kutztown from 1933-68, was revived at the Hall of Fame banquet. A total of 47 alumnae of Tau Kappa, many of whom are pictured, gathered for special recognition of their group and to watch as seven new members, current KU athletics standouts, joined their ranks.

utztown University is poised for great things. Nothing demonstrates this exciting potential more than the impressive list of donors on the following pages.

There are several reasons why this list is impressive:

- Kutztown University received more private support than ever during 2001-02. The pace was set by record alumni giving more than $1.8 million. A remarkable accomplishment in the current economic environment.
- This extraordinary level of giving is a result of our alumni, friends, and corporations rising to the challenge of the Third Century Fund capital campaign. The goals of the Third Century Fund (a new science building, increased scholarship endowment, the Alumni Plaza, and increased support of the Annual Fund) will make a difference in the lives of Kutztown University students for generations to come.
- The list represents a broad cross section of alumni -- with gifts spanning 80 years of classes, as well as parents, friends, corporations, faculty, staff and emeriti.

This broad range and high level of support positions the University community to rise to the next challenge before us. Provided we meet all of the goals of our campaign, Kutztown University will receive a $500,000 grant from the Kresge Foundation. We will be successful if 20 percent of our alumni make gifts this academic year.

This all points to something that became clear to me during my interviews for the presidency: Kutztown University is a wonderfully strong university.

To all of you who are listed on the following pages, thank you for your commitment to Kutztown University.

F. Javier Cevallos
President, Kutztown University

If you are among the many who invested in Kutztown University through the 2001-2002 Annual Fund, your name should be listed herein. If your name was omitted or incorrectly listed, please contact the KU Foundation at 610-683-1394. This report includes donors who contributed between July 1, 2001 and June 30, 2002. Gifts received after June 30 will be acknowledged in the 2002-2003 donor report.
